Memo for records:
25X1A9a

[redacted] telephoned me on Friday, 21 December 1962, about 2:20 p.m. (during the heavy snowstorm, and shortly before the scheduled 3 p.m. snow-emergency dismissal of employees was to take effect), to ask me as a "personal favor" to himself, if I could help him get transportation to Langley headquarters for one [redacted], who he said was an Agency employee, recently of the counter-intelligence school, and on his way to [redacted] the next day. [redacted], he said, was with him at his house (near Foxhall Road and Mac Arthur Blvd.), having had lunch with him; [redacted], he said, had an appointment to see his boss Mr. [redacted] later that afternoon.

I checked the shuttle-car route and schedule, and we agreed that it would be impracticable to try to reach the shuttle in the storm. I offered to call a cab; he said he had already checked, without success. (I did not offer to send an Agency chauffeured car for him.) I offered to get in touch with [redacted] if that were appropriate, but [redacted] said, no, that would not do. [redacted] said thanks anyway.
